As shown by this year's index results, the scale and speed of progress are deeply insufficient to achieve gender equality by 2030.

Resourcing gender equality efforts is crucial to avoid the rollback of hard-earned progress, and to ensure that pathways to growth, prosperity, innovation, and sustainability are levelling the ground for all persons.

Achieving gender equality demands governments and businesses to shift both resources and mindsets towards a new paradigm of economic thinking, where gender parity is embraced as a condition for equitable and sustainable growth.

Through collaborative efforts and targeted interventions between governments and businesses, we can make 50/50 a reality.

 Is gender equality achievable by 2030?

 According to the Global Gender Gap Report of 2024, the scale and speed of progress are deeply insufficient to achieve gender equality by 2030.
